NEW YORK, Jan. 24-Today's observation of the solar eclipse was one of the most successful ever E. E. Free, head of the Scientific American's expedition at Easthampton, L. I., over a special telephone wire to the New York studio of Station WOR. The corona, said Dr. Free, was larger and more beautiful than had been expected. Two prominences were visible to the astronomers at Easthampton.

Weather conditions were perfect. Dr. Free reported, and a series of photographs and motion pictures was obtained, which, it is expected, will be satisfactory.

In so far as the observers judge, he said, the Buffalo and East-Special trains from Boston and hampton parties worked perfectly. "All of the astronomers kept their heads," he added. Dr. Free said no important announcements of the effect of the them was a large body of Boston

'ECLIPSE OF COLOR'

Exhibited at N. Y. Museum of Natural History

NEW YORK, Jan. 24-The American Museum of Natural History has on exhibition a unique oil painting of the total solar eclipse of June 8. This interesting record was presented to the museum by Edward Adams, and was painted by Howard Russell Butler, N. A. The picture is unique, as it is the only study of such astronomical phenomena in which the colors of the corona and its prominences have been observed by a trained artist, and recorded at the moment, eliminating the chance of inaccuracy.

it is an especially fortunate record, as the exquisite corona is shown in all its beauty; but perhaps most remarkable were three great tongues flame, the scarlet prominences which made the eclipse of 1918 memorable as the "Eclipse of Color." Our Little Colonial House

Again Hangs Out Its Latchstring

The opening of our newly decorated Little Colonial House is an occasion fraught with interest for many a seeker of the charming furnishings of other days.

Modern appointments such as electric lights and hardwood floors, serve to display the lasting charm of well chosen antiques; and to suggest effective arrangements and settings for them, even in the newest of homes.

"On Monday a total eclipse of the sun was visibleinthetown. The commencement and duration answered very nearly to the calculations in the books. It arrested very general observation and must have excited the most sublime sensations. The atmosphere was unusually clear and not a cloud to be feen. The dark ness came in very fuddenly and to fuch a degree that the countenances of persons well known could not be difcerned at twelve to fourteen feet distance in the streets. The continuance of darkness was about four minutes and a half."

MGAIN a total eclipse - after one hundred and nineteen years. The recurrence of this eclipse will be studied by scientists and remarked on by all, but to you there will come no inconvenience.

When the sun ceases to do its work, there immediately comes a demand for light. Turbines are in readiness. Steam boilers are stoked. The generating of more current is under way.

good and some indifferent hockey and the close checking of both teams tended to slow up the game consider-ably. Referee Fred Jon kept the game well in hand by imposing numerous penalties, some for very minor of-

In the first five minutes of the game the teams placed at a terrific pace. Irvin opened the scoring two minutes from the opening face off, when he took the puck in center ice, tricked the whole Saskatoon team, and shot one past Hainsworth into an uncovered corner of the net.

Seven minutes later B. Cook shot one from outside the defense and after hitting McCusker's pads, the puck dropped between his skates and rolled over the goal line for the first and only goal of the evening for Saskatoon. Play in the second period was listless. Both teams were content to play a close checking and defensive game. It was the first game in Regina where the referee was strict with the offside and anti-defense rule and it was not until nearly the end of the game that they realized what he was doling.

Human history testifies Heaven and earth shall pass away

Fortunately, in all ages there have in the nineteenth century a woman of human life. She saw that perfect answer was such as would be inwhole-heartedly and pure-mindedly textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," page 113, she writes: "According to the Scripture, find that God is true, 'but every [mortal] man a liar." The sense of things that denies the perfection of God and His creation is false

This fundamental proposition of Christian Science is indeed "according to the Scripture." Writes St. Paul to Timothy: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect." The purpose of the Bible is to reprove, correct, in-struct in rightness, until naught remains that denies the perfection of God's man. According to the Scripture, God is true, and aught that argues to the contrary is false.

When Mrs. Eddy learned that it is the physical senses which presume to take issue with God's perfection, she saw that it is the impressions of these senses which constitute what the Bible terms the carnal mind, that s enmity against God. If God's man is all right, the mind or sense which says that he is partly wrong is a lying mind, a false sense; and it is the business of scriptural Christianity to reprove, correct, and in-struct thought until the false sense disappears, that "the man of God may he perfect, throughly furnished unto

Mrs Eddy calls this false sense of things mortal mind, to distinguish it from immortal Mind, which latter is properly spelled with a capital M, for it is a complete syronym for God. When Paul declared that salvation should be found in taking on the Christian Science has been accused of unduly emphasizing the healing of disease, whereas the prime purpose killed under the rank accumulation of religion is to save from sufficient answer, to a Christian, should be the gospel record of Jesus, who by both his example and his specific command to his followers identified the healing of the sick with blind shall be opened; the the religion of Christianity. ears of the deaf shall be unstopped;

Promotion of mere physical would not of itself be worthy of religion. What the critic possibly has failed to see is that true Christian healing is identical with the destruction of sin. They cannot be sepatrine of perfection, this Christian rated.

What is sin? In the first place it is mental. Back of sinful act always is sinful thought. Mere restraint of sinful deed leaves sin untouched. Disposing of a Negation

Having accepted the scriptural assurance that the author of all reality is good, and the creator of that only which is good, the Christian Scientist does not shun the logical conclusion that evil is not an entity. The teach ing of Christian Science, that evil is primarily a negation, may be illustrated by the negativeness of the evil called ignorance. The schools are devoted to the overcoming of ignorance, yet they do not regard it as something. No time is wasted in the schools in trying to instruct any one as to the origin or elements of ignorance. If a pupil were to demand to know who made ignorance, where it came from and what it consists of, he would have to be told that nobody made ignorance, it does not come from anywhere nor There need be no perplexity in re- does it consist of anything. His baptismal names were Robert Lewis, and Dr. Jepp says his father always wrote the second name Lewis. Stevenson himself had a fancy for was always the British, not the French, pronunciation. I never heard him called Robert in his own home; nor did I see it written by him, ex-

"Geluk bestaat in goed-zijn en goed- ni - in pronunciation a short sen-den, zijn duizenden van krankheid en doen; slechts datgene wat God geeft tence. I was told by one who was present when the form of the name was being discussed that the late Reverend J. E. Newell, then one of the tutors at the Malua College, asked: Why not Tusitala"?

The suggestion was acclaimed by all who knew the Samoan language one word of four syllables a name, a title, and a description of his occupation. The Samoans use only one name, and have no prefix like "Mr."-S. J. Whitmee, in The Atlantic.

MORE CAUTION NOW NOTED IN STOCK MARKET

Traders Inclined to Take Profits This Week-News Favorable

NEW YORK, Jan. 24 (Special)—In 1753 ½ 1755 ½

Careful speculators were taking profits, and waiting for a big reaction before buying again. Whenever the most strength was displayed profes-sional operators were selling short, in an effort to depress the prices for on effort to depress the prices for certain leading securities, and then for the list as a whole.

At times they directed their attack egainst United States Steel common, but this was the one prominent stock that did not go down to any extent. On the contrary its tendency was upward, though not in a notable way until the midweek had been passed. Then in a single day, it advanced 3 points. in a single day, it advanced 3 points, on particularly large transactions. The professionals were firmly of the opinion that if they could break the market for United States Steel common. could break it for other leading

When they saw the resistance which when they saw the resistance which it displayed and the pronounced strength that was in evidence on Thursday, naturally the professionals turned to the buying side and this induced new buying on the part of other speculators.

Traders Become Cautious

Some disappointment was expressed yesterday over the failure of United States Steel common and the market as a whole to continue to advance in the same vigorous fashion as that stock and other well-known industrials had done the day before. Cautious operators did not forget that vesterday was Friday and that to libe even shorter the large of the large of will be even shorter than usual on Saturday.

They proceeded to take quickly accumulated profiss and others to increase their commitments on the short side. This naturally made for irregularity, following notable strength in some stocks, and in the market quite generally earlier in the day. U. S. Cast Iron Pipe, for instance, advanced nearly 15 points.

Until the sudden outburst of activity in, United States Steel on Thursday the opinion was quite generally held and expressed in financial circles that the market could not be expected to advance much further without some big and favorable news that would have a direct bearing upon it.

New Factors Needed.

New Factors Needed

It was assumed for a single day that perhaps another big upward swing had actually started without such news. Yesterday after the close there was a disposition to doubt the correctness of this assumption.

Just at the moment speculators are 11212 feeling their way more or less, largely because of the fact that this upward hecause of the fact that this upward movement has been under way for nearly three months, that many stocks have had very big advances, and that there is nothing in sight in the immediate future on which to base another turn upward on a substantial scale.

The news of the more important kind was somewhat mixed, but in the main constructive and encouraging. For a day perhaps, the oil stocks were depressed by the passing of the Mexican Seaboard dividend. Very little attention was given to this incident in comparison with that accorded to the numerous advances reported in the prices of crude oil and gasoline.

Those who are most familiar with the industry, followed closely the deciline reported from day to day in the production of the Wortham oil pool. From present indications the peak was reached about the middle of this month, and it also seems that from low on the output of that pool will now on, the output of that pool will not be a disturbing factor in the oil industry as a whole. It is true that while sentiment generally with respect to it and to the oil shares is much more favorable than it was several months ago, there is still lacking gen-eral speculative enthusiasm with re-spect to the oil stocks.

Rallroad Shares Quieter

It may be noted that although con-fidence in the railroad shares is not lacking, there is not much disposi-tion to operate in them on a specula-tive basis on anything like the extent that was done earlier in the present market movement. The money market continues ex-tremely easy. The sharp advance in the reserve ratio of both the Federal Reserve System and the New York Federal Reserve Bank, notably the latter, indicates that so far the money position in this country has not been congested by what has taken place in the market for securities, and in trade in general since election day.

It is altogether too early to predict the outcome of political affairs in Germany during the next few years and the first three outcomes of political affairs in Germany during the next few years and the first three outcomes are the first three outcomes and the first three outcomes are the first three outcomes are three outcomes and the first three outcomes are three outcomes and three outcomes are three outcomes and the first three outcomes are three outcomes and three outcomes are three outcomes and three outcomes are t received even a larger vote of support in the Reichstag a few days ago than might have been looked for, in view of the great political confusion that has existed in that body recently.

WORLD'S NEED BULL FACTOR

At Prices Steadily Advancing

CHICAGO, Jan. 24 (Special)—The volume of the trade in the big pit on the board of trade has reached dimensions seldom if ever witnessed, and his week.

Evidence of a big world need for wheat was the main factor underlying the market, and the fact that Europe has bought such large quantities of Southern Hemisphere wheat that prices for such wheat have also ad-vanced in the face of the new crop movement in Australia and Argentina added enthusiasm to the buying.

May wheat advanced to $1.96, and May rye had a spectacular upturn to $1.76. The middle of the week there was some export business in domestic wheats, which also stimulated buying. Outside speculative activity is of im-mense proportions, and so far the buying demand has been sufficient to take the slack out of the market.

Since election day last November there has been an appreciation in wheat prices of 50 cents or more in the case of the May, with reactions of only a few cents at any time.

Heavy Profit Taking

The last few days there has again seen a tremendous lot of profit-taking. and there are many in the trade now long, with the original bulls given an opportunity seldom accorded bull campaigners to take profits so easily.

The tremendous extent of the so-called "eleventh hour" buying has made many in the trade extremely conservative, as they are of, the opinion that present conditions do not warrant such wild advances, regard-

Export clearances continue light, es-American clearances are not as large as at the corresponding time last year. as at the corresponding time last year. A big bull card has been the fact that Russia has bought flour in various countries, as well as wheat for seed purposes. This emphasized the fact that Europe was without the aid of exports from that country, and also appears to be lacking in supplies from Rulgaria and Rumania, two countries which usually export a lot of wheat.

Corn Prices Weak

The cash situation in oats is not much better than in wheat.

In rye foreign needs are said to be heavy, but clearances are extremely small, and stocks of rye in the east are finding little demand, although prices nominally are far below the Chicago basis.

ON STEEL OUTLOOK

NEW YORK, Jan. 24—"The steel outlook never was better, said Charles M. Schwab, chairman of Bethlehem M. Schwab, chairman of Bethlehem Steel, as he was sailing on the Olympic. "I am very optimistic. Steel companies should all show better earnings for 1925 than in 1924. Prices should increase at least $10 a ton because of the price of raw material. Steel prices are $10 a ton lower than last January, and should at least be up to that level. "General business outlook could not

STOCK PRICE MOVEMENT IS VERY UNEVEN

Oils and Rails in Good Demand—Textiles Are Weak

Stock prices displayed considerable irregularity today. With the opening delayed 45 minutes because of the eclipse many operators absented themselves altogether.

Oils and southwestern rails were in brisk demand, several attaining their highest prices in a year or more. Weakness developed, however, in the textile and motor groups. American Woolen common and preferred each dropped about 2 points in anticipation a poor showing in the 1924 reports soon to be published. Mack Truck, Nash Motors and Chandler sold a point or so below yesterday's final quotations. Equipments presented several strong spots in re-flection of the announcement of additional large orders by leading rail-roads. American Car % Foundry jumping 31/4 points.

The closing was irregular. Total sales approximated 450,000 shares. Buying of semispeculative railroad bonds featured today's operations, which were quiet. "Katy" adjustment gains by fractions.

Virginia Carolina Chemical 7s moved up 1% points, and Skelly Oil 6½s fig-ured in a moderate upward movement of the oil issues. Liberty bonds were easy.

MARKET OPINIONS

Tucker, Bartholomew & Co. Boston: The history of movements of the stock market has been that prices have continued to move upward so long as real betterment and expansion in trade continued. It is only when apparent improvement was in reality unsound and inflationary that stock prices have appeared to be moving in the opposite direction to general trade. We continue of the opinion that stock prices in general have yet to reach the highest levels which are to be recorded before the present bull swing is over. present bull swing is over.

Schirmer, Atherton & Co., Boston: Although the market as a whole has made no real progress since Jan. 2 last, it looks as if it had started on a new forward movement. We believe, however, that it will be the part of wisdom for those carrying stocks on borrowed money to take an inventory of their position and determine for themselves how much of a reaction they could stand without suffering disaster.

F. L. Milliken & Co., Boston: The new year is starting out in auspicious manner for the railroads. Gross income of the past two weeks is in most cases reported well ahead of last year, with indications pointing to prosperity in 1925. In view of this fact, we are likely to see increases in the dividends paid by some of the old conservative roads, while the likelihood of consolidations this year make many other carrier stocks attractive.

Elmer H. Bright & Co., Boston: Increasing discrimination should be used in making, purchases, for there are few groups which have not shared substantially in the rise which started after election.

Hayden, Stone & Co., Boston: The market maintains a very strong tone and many individual issues have gone to new high prices. It is noticeable however, that the reactions are becoming more frequent and, in short, it is more of a two-sided affair than it has hitherto been. It seems hardly probable that securities are now being accumulated. It would seem as though the possibility for profit at this time hardly justified the risk of making any extended commitment.

PRESS URGED TO PROMOTE PEACE

Wickham Steed Says More Attractive Propaganda Is Necessary

Special from Monitor Bureau

LONDON, Jan. 12-The influence the press on public opinion in the of the press on public opinion in the FOR SALE—Imperial Valley, California and Iowa farm lands. Write for prices or see C. S. ALLEN, 35 N. Broadway, Pasadena, Calif. he proceedings of the recent national No-More-War Congress at the Church House, Westminster.

In his introductory remarks, the chairman, the Rev. Thomas Night-Medical Property State Chairman, the Rev. Thomas Night-Medical Property State Chicago Real Estate Roard. ugale, was of opinion that this subect was the most important of the week's discussions. In the old days the press was for the few, but today was for the million. Formerly, it was the medium for recording facts, but today it recorded both fact and rush and space limitations of modern newspapers, and contended that all he people wanted was the news presented quickly and attractively, and without any great demand upon the intellect. The worst point about propaganda, however praiseworthy State 4243 or Rogers Park 7059. s aim, was that its methods were so dull. Unless the fight for peace could he made thoroughly interesting, it would never get on to the front pages of the daily papers. Once the country became so roused that it would demand peace, there would be no

nere war Systematic Feeding of Press

Maj. Gladstone Murray, lately in the publicity department of the League of Nations Union, urged the land Are.

HOSTON Large double pariors, newly furnished, hardwood floors, electric lights, steam beat, theplace, suitable for 2 or 3 people: $15 as week; also smaller front room $5. 14 West-land Are. necessity for all peace congresses, necessity for all peace congresses, including the League of Nations are church; business woman preferred. Box Z-22, The Christian Science Monitor, Boston. itself, systematically to feed the press in all countries. Peace news must not have the appearance of church—Front from, well furnished, all modern conveniences. MRS. RROWN, Copies 1287-R. propaganda, but merely be stated as facts. Today, the League of Nations Union was feeding 2800 English ournals regularly with the facts about peace.

These included the London papers. press, weekly press, women's and rade-union papers, and the reviews. There were no greater idealists anywhere than in Fleet Street, and if it were not for these idealists, the standard of journalism in this counnewspapers ranked high above other countries. The value of wireless, too, in forwarding the cause of peace and internationalism, was only just eginning to be realized.

Influence of Press Questioned Mr. Hamilton Fyfe, editor of the Daily Herald, was inclined to doubt whether the press did influence the people so much as had been stated. and instanced the election of 1906, when a Liberal majority was rewhen a Liberal majority was re-turned to office contrary to the gen-turned to the general expectation that the Tories would be in power; and also the campaign on behalf of wholemeal bread. In the region of foreign afairs, however, newspapers wielded normous influence, and could make the difficulty of verification.

Twenty years ago, English people were told that the French people were theil worst enemies. Then the tone suddenly changed, and the En tente Cordiale reigned supreme. The same thing happened with Russia. Humanity, however, was much the same all the world over. Every naion was guilty of war if it deliberately prepared for war, because it had war in its mind.

If people really 'new themselves, and other luman beings, or had a real understanding of history, and he fact that war had invariably been followed by disaster, war would Newspapers should be run as a trust, not as a business, or a profit-making machine. It was a terible suggestion that the press must not be in advance of public opinion A newspaper which was not in advance of public opinion failed in its duty toward its readers and to the world at large.

Nothing could have shown more clearly the embarrassment caused to the orthodox political and trade union movements of Europe by the speeches of the British trade union visitors to Russia than the discussions on this subject at the meetings of the executive committees of the Labor and Socialist Internationale and the International Federation of Trade Unions at Brussels early in January.

The leaders of the chief continental movements, especially the German, French, Belgian, and Scandinavian, expressed anxiety concerning the stimulus which, they believe, these speeches have given to Communist propaganda in Europe. The representatives of the Russian Menshevist Party were especially outspoken in their criticism. Mr. Vandervelde, the Belgian leader, expressed amazement that the trade union delegation had apparently condoned the suppression of liberty in Russia itself and the armed occupation of Georgia.

At a joint meeting of the two bodies M. Jouhaux (a member of the Amsterdam Bureau), while he did not conceal his own opposition to Communism and his suspicion of the "unity front" tactics, declared that there could be no discussion on the part of the representatives of the Trade Union Internationale until the position of the British General Council had been cleared up. The matter was left over, therefore, and the executive committee of the Socialist Internationale decided later to postpone a pronouncement until its next meeting. Before this is held, it is expected, both the British General Council and the Amsterdam Internationale will have declared their respective policies. The General Council is to meet on Jan. 29, when it should have before it not only the report of its delegation to Russia on the industrial and economic conditions in that country, but its definite proposals on the question of co-operation between the British and Russian trade unions. The general report, which will be a record of observations and statistics, will probably be accepted formally. The tussle will come on the unity question. Whatever decision is reached by the General Council will probably be communicated to a special meeting of the Council of the Amsterdam Internationale which has been called for Feb. 5, and this body will, it is believed, have to make up its mind whether to agree to an "all-inclusive unity conference" without preliminary conditions, or to maintain the position that unity can only be attained by the Russian unions accepting the constitution of the Amsterdam body. Mr. Purcell, who is the chairman of the delegation to Russia, and also the chairman of the Amsterdam Bureau, has let it be understood that he intends to press for the less rigid policy to be adopted The view is taken by the continental leaders that this would produce a crisis in the affairs of the Trade Union Internationale and stiffen the anti-Communist attitude of the Socialist Internationale. The perturbation of the British political labor leaders at this possibility is not concealed, especially as the discussions in the Brussels meetings indicated that the enthusiasm for the British movement manifested by the continental leaders at the Ham- acceptably followed by American presidents in burg Congress two years ago has cooled considerably, owing to what is regarded as the too tolerant attitude of the British leaders to the Soviet Government's methods of suppressing political opposition.

The reply of the British leaders to this is that advocacy of the re-establishment of normal trading and economic relations with Russia does not imply tolerance of the political methods of the Soviet Government. The tendency toward strained relations in the Internationale nevertheless persists, and the outcome of the trade union discussions at Amsterdam on Feb. 5 may determine whether or not this tendency is strengthened.

Getting the Facts Straight

tion?" It was designed to show that there was nothing the matter except the failure to enbear out this view, despite the claims of those who, for reasons of their own, are opposed to prohibition. A Monitor reader in Milwaukee has furnished a copy of a booklet recently issued by the Wisconsin division of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment. In it the association attempts to answer the claims made by the Anti-Saloon League of that State that prohibition has benefited the public generally, that it has reduced poverty, aided prosperity, and lessened drunkenness and crime.

It is interesting to note that the chief arguments used by the wet propagandists are general denials. Several of the counts in the Anti-Saloon League's brief are branded by the association as falsehoods. There are statistics cited, of course, but all these go to prove the main point which it was sought to emphasize, to wit, that there is nothing the matter with prohibition except the failure to enforce it. All the statements included in the summary of the wet organization show that it is not prohibition but the lack of complete enforcement of existing law, that has caused the unhappy conditions which it is claimed exist.

A careful study of the arguments presented serves to make still firmer the conviction that the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment does not oppose the law because of its alleged failure to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, but because it is, certainly and surely, doing that very thing. No one can make the claim that prohibition is complete. Possibly the time will not soon come when it can be said that there are no violations of the law. Most laws are violated. But it has not often been insisted that because they are violated they should be repealed. Surely the law which prohibits theft should not be regarded as a dead letter because it is broken every day in the year. Civilized nations have reached the realization that theft and many other acts branded as criminal are wrong. The persistent effort is to enforce the laws which describe and interdict such offenses.

Perhaps in an earlier period there was an Association Against the Law Punishing Robbery, or organizations opposed to acts prohibiting more serious offenses. It would be interesting to know if the propagandists of these associations argued, for instance, that thievery could be best checked or abolished by condoning it in some cases, or by providing, by amendments to the law, that a few might indulge in robbery with the assurance of complete immunity. It would be well for all those who attempt to discuss the prohibition problem to get all the facts and get them straight. It is a simple proposition, properly viewed. All the argument against prohibition, if it is to persuade or convince anyone, must be based, not upon the results of enforcement but upon those of incomplete enforcement. The disastrous results of indulgence in noxious liquors have not been visited upon those who have observed and obeyed the law, but upon those who have consciously violated it. The claim that there is more drunkenness now than in the days before the law became effective is preposterous and presumptuous. Even those who advance that claim do not believe it. That is an important fact, and perhaps the most important fact, to be considered.

Twenty-two years ago next month, on Feb. 7, M. Jules Jusserand was received in Washington

The

French

by Theodore Roosevelt, then President, as the Ambassador of France. This long and extraordinary term of service has been concluded, much to the regret of those Americans who have learned to know and respect him, and in a few days the veteran diplomatist will depart for his home. Today he is the unofficial guest of Boston, bidding farewell to many friends. They, together with all who have been familiar with his activities at the national capital, testify to the faithfulness and acceptability of his service as a wise and resourceful plenipotentiary from a friendly nation, and as a considerate and sympathetic counselor in the discussion and adjustment of international problems.

The unique career of M. Jusserand might be taken as arguing that diplomatists, like poets, must possess an inherent adaptability for the work they undertake. There is being tried, in the United States and elsewhere, the courageous experiment of training men and women for high places in the diplomatic service. It is perhaps too early to hazard a guess as to the success of that experiment. But until it has been proved that a person even extraordinarily equipped, educationally and by experience, can be made to order to fit into the scheme of international diplomacy, the wise course may be to adhere to the policy of individual selection so the past.

M. Jusserand has made friends not only for himself, but for his beloved France. He was in a trying position in the months immediately preceding the entry of the United States into the World War, when it was attempted among some foreign legations to influence the people of America to espouse the cause of one or another of the warring European countries. But it has been said to the credit of the French Ambassador that he refrained, conscientiously and almost stubbornly, from engaging in the promulgation or dissemination of nationalistic propaganda. Both he and those who at the time may have been disposed to criticize him have had abundant proof since then of the wisdom of his course.

Diplomacy has its strict code of ethics. This code cannot be violated or ignored with impunity. M. Jusserand has not proved this-it was his good fortune to realize it. This may force it. All the facts, account, at least in part, for his continued acceptable service, and for the high regard in which he is held by the people of his own country and by those of the country to which he has been assigned.

news as the scene of political or social disturbances may fairly be regarded as tolerably happy and contented. Hardly a week passes that does not recordsome threat of revolution or political revolt in the Balkan countries of Europe, while in Central and South America uprisings against the Government are expected to develop with varying degrees of regularity. On the other hand, the world would indeed be startled to read in the morning's news, "Nova Scotians rise against the Canadian Government," or "New Brunswick people unite to force better treatment by Dominion legislators." That nothing of the kind happens is due chiefly to the character of the residents of those provinces, who are chiefly descendants of emigrants from Great Britain, and who still cherish the traditions of settled and orderly government handed down from past generations. Yet while the notion of a movement for separation from the Dominion by the Maritime Provinces is unthinkable, there has appeared in some sections of these provinces a manifestation of self-determination that may lead to various political changes. A former Conservative member of the Canadian Parliament from Nova Scotia has raised the issue of "the Maritime Provinces first," and is appealing to his fellow countrymen to organize, regardless of political parties, for the purpose of redressing certain alleged grievances, chiefly economic, although there is some question as to the financial arrangements with the larger provinces to the west.

It is claimed that the "Maritimers" are forced to pay unduly high freight rates on goods brought from Quebec and Ontario, and that the tariff laws operate to the disadvantage of the people down by the sea. Complaint is also made of languishing industries and of heavy taxation, a burden that is largely the result of the enormous expenditures by Canada for its army sent to battle in Europe for the motherland. In some cases it is urged that the tariff duties are not high enough to shut out the "dumped" products of great industries of the United States. On the other hand, there are protests against the exceedingly high cost of living, said to be in part due to heavy customs taxes on articles of general consumption. When it comes to formulating a practical plan for relief, the "Maritimers" appear to be in somewhat the same position as the American farmers; they ask that something should be done, but nobody seems to know just what the Dominion Government can or should do.

Thanks are due, without doubt, to somebody for the rich openings which certain vocal and instrumental teachers of Europe have of late found in America; for the lucrative positions, that is to say, which they have secured in the recently established music schools of the country, Obviously, also, plenty of thanks are owed, in turn, to every master of the voice, the violin and the piano who, forsaking a career in his own land, expends his strength furthering social experiments in another; and who withdraws the renown of his presence and the benefit of his talent away from France, Italy, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, or wherever else, in order to bestow them upon the United States.

But to risk a one-sided view of the situation, there can unquestionably be pointed out persons—yes, a number of them can be called by name-who have industriously labored the past twenty years to get a music education movement going on American soil and who really have made possible the fine jobs into which the visitors have stepped. Does anyone ask who they are? Let him look for some of them in the classrooms of universities; and for others, on the platforms of public and private lecture halls. For the professor of music and the touring music lecturer may be regarded as chief among those who have prepared the way for the specialized pedagogue of today. The professor, giving a course in appreciation of the classics to large groups of students and lessons in harmony and counterpoint to small ones, and the lecturer, talking to popular or intimate gatherings on the operas of Wagner. on the orchestral works of the impressionists. or on the quartets and trios of the chambermusic writers, have instilled such artistic desires in the community as only heavily endowed, magnificently equipped and brilliantly staffed conservatories could satisfy.

Necessarily, the men and women who have been called to posts of honor and profit in the new institutions will entertain feelings of profound regard for the wealthy benefactors and sustainers from whose bounty they directly draw their stipends. At the same time, they may be expected, in all justice, to cherish a warm feeling in their hearts for the professor. perhaps emeritus, or for the lecturer, his labors possibly but a memory, who helped set the whole splendid idea of national music study in motion.

Editorial Notes

One of the most pernicious menaces threatening the world today is to be found in the propaganda which is being assiduously promulgated in many quarters regarding what is glibly spoken of as the next war. For example, Mat.-Gen. John L. Hines, chief of staff of the United States Army, in an address in Boston the other day to the Women's Republican Club of Massachusetts, praised the work of women in the late war, and declared that in a future emergency they would probably be called upon to serve in even more important capacities than before. Without doubting for a moment that his audience, in particular, and the women of the world in general, could easily measure up to these increased responsibilities, there is another side to the entire question. A little boy who was eating an apple was asked what he intended to do with the core. He answered, "There ain't going to be any core." Similarly, if the efforts of those striving to arouse the peace sentiment throughout the world are in any way successful, it ought soon to be possible to declare with equal certainty, "There ain't going to be another war.'

A letter to The Times of London recently contained some highly instructive information concerning hawkers and tramps. Its writer was descanting on the general subject of persistent peddlers, and incidentally told of the chalk marks often placed on doors by first comers, for the information of later arrivals. And there is no reason, he added, why pestered householders should not anticipate the verdicts thus rendered. 'The sign I use," he continued, "is a triangle, which means that the house has been spoilt by too many vagrants calling." But there are other signs which may better suit the occasion. For example, a diamond indicates that the house is "safe for a cold 'tatur." A circle containing a cross means that the owner is of a religious turn of mind and will give to deserving cases. The sign which is most repugnant is a square, for this denotes that a savage dog is included among the personnel of the establishment and that the householder is likely to send for the police. Pretty soon, however, if the professional secrets of these mendicants become too well known they will have to think out some new ones!

The Call of Green Hills in France

Early in the post-war days it was, before the American summer students had penetrated to the provinces in their reconquest of France. Neither students nor transatlantic shipping companies had yet realized the possibilities of a collegiate atmosphere in a renovated steerage, and the mparatively few Americans who crossed that year were of the kind for whom Paris constituted France. Thus it was that I found in provincial Beurre that the American soldier had become already scarcely more than an amazing tradition, and that an American in "Main Street" attire of 1920 was worth a stare, even an honest, turninground stare.

Perhaps, then, it was merely mistrust of the stranger that made such a difficulty about the renting of a bicycle for a month. Or, perhaps, in sleepy Beurre bicycles are rented only by the hour or the day, and my demand was upsetting the entire etiquette of the bicycle trade—to say nothing of stolid Monsieur Saunier's arithmetic.
"Are there not any number of 'bicyclettes' on display, with signs boldly announcing, 'Pour Louer'?" "Out, Monsieur, mais je n'ai pas encore. . . . But what is it Monsieur says? He is staying with Madame Painchaud? Et puis! That is something; that is again

The inevitable "combien": zestful bargaining: agreement; selection of the machine; payment "Quarante francs. C'est ca; exactement. Bon jour, Monsieur; bon voyage."

A "vayage" requiring some skill in navigation it seems just at first. Neither guide book nor conversation book will help here; they have not even given warning that the bicyclette Française is not the same species as the "wheel" Americanus, a fact established by but a single moment's awkwara trundling. It is no matter of individual eccentricity; all the bicycles we meet bump-bumping along over the cobbles of the "pavé" street own an unmistakable family resemblance. All have the same low, rakish lines, with the handlebars set low and far forward, so as to force every crouching rider to forsake dignity and comfort—apparently for the doubtful pleasure of looking like a racer.

But what are comfort and dignity when there are green hills calling, and a long white road that pulls like a long white cord? Of course, there is a lecture on s at the Université, and tomorrow patient Pro fesseur Rouget will look just a wee bit reproachful. But is July in the Juras and yesterday's rain has washed the air clean and left a sparkle in it-brought April back, and its cool urge. Up and away then! The day is ours-

Gently, slowly, at first, then faster, more surely, the river road draws us-my strange bicyclette and me Away from the narrow, hard-cobbled ways of men, beside the low bank where the washerwomen sing as they beat white clothes on white, smooth stones, out through a dour, squat gate of the Romans, past a lone fisherman, lolling in grassy shade—out and up, the white road goes, slipping into the hills where the river slips out.

Up it leads, and up, above the river now, snuggling close under the hill's green shoulder, edging past a cliff. clinging giddily on rocky ledge, ever climbing, and ever ever winding, twisting, twining itself into the arms of the hills. Around a bend, around another, opening up one vista only to promise another more lovely just around the corner-so the road tempts us upward, always only to the next bend and its adventure.

A stern resolve, this turn shall be the last! No, the next. Well, just one more, but it will be the same. Around it—at last a promise fulfilled! A view that does not mere!y tantalize! A place to stop, a scene to explore, a view 'o satisfy for hours! Ahead, the valley opening out a straight green path through the hills, with the river a mirror down the center; behind, our gleaming trail, lost at times in the roll and surge of the lower hills. + + +

Only France would have a stone bench in just the spot to take fullest advantage of it all! From below comes a pleasant, muffled roar as the river's smooth blue becomes white in the millrace. A few tilted vineyards hold the further shore, and above them the close forest ranks march strongly upward against a grass-covered fortress crouching on the summit. On the nearer side grand heights fall away to green velvet pastures at the water's edge, with brown patches of earth, the red of tiled roofs and the white of trim walks all spaced with unconscious artistry on the picture's green background. The bench is warm in the sun, but all about is cool shade, and a breeze ripples the leaves, whispering messages of its journeys, of oceans, mountains, deserts, of space and the universe. It is a place to stop one's thinking, listening to the breeze, to lose the world-and afterward a place to think, to dream.

4 4 4 But the restless road is tugging, coaxing us upward again. Abandoning the river, now become too straight for its wayward whim, the truant road ventures boldly into the higher hills, at times almost losing itself in their overhanging verdure. Now there are peasant milk girls on the road, helping their big dogs drag the heavy carts up the slope. Always the road goes winding, climbing; ever there is an intriguing bend just ahead, with undiscovered possibilities on the other side.

Suddenly around one such bend our white road becomes a solled village street, but still a sunlit street, holding apart two rows of white stone cottages that nestle against the mountainside. And at the end of the street there is only a blank cliff face; it is the end of our white road. Perhaps that is why the tiny inn has a big sign proclaiming it the "Bout du Monde." Or, perhaps, the man who named it had followed our road.

Turning relactantly, from the "End of the World," we drop back into the world; down, down for miles, metimes drifting with the clouds, sometimes swooping with the swallows, twisting, winding, idling with the river, gliding, floating, dreaming down. All too soon a glimpse of tiled roofs, incredibly clean in the sun, fore-tells the town, and we stop again to tarry by the stream.

The Week in New York

New York, Jan. 24 Athletics and etymology have lately established them selves on the endless list of causes for the rise and fall of nations on the money market. When Paavo Nurmi, the amazing Finnish runner, started his world career at the Olympic Games last summer and continued until he had come to America and smashed age-old records to the general admiration and astonishment of everyone within reach of the telegraph, cable or radio—and whom does that not include?—the net effect, according to Leonard Astrom, the Finnish Minister to the United States, was to enhance the value of his country in the financial markets by $10,000,000. Interest in Finland was stimulated everywhere, with happy consequences for its bonds and products. When the city of Christiania, on the other hand, changed its name to Oslo, it stepped out of its niche in the financial world, and now will probably, it is said, have to pay more for its bond issues until Oslo has seeped into the lore of business. These considerations, perhaps, seem remote from the champing stock tickers, and they would be remote, except that they affect good-will, which is the current that makes contacts.

4 4 4 Ninety-nine years from now, when New York has its next total eclipse of the sun, whoever is responsible for and drivers, will be able to know with some precision just how much light will be needed in the various parts of the shadow between the path of totality and full day The gas and electric companies, which supplied the light today, working in co-operation with the Astro nomical Society and the Illuminating Engineering Society stationed trained observers, technicians and engineers about the city to gather data, which will be preserved for the next eclipse. As the previous one in New York occurred in 1806, when the city was a modest village, there was no such thoughtfulness then. This foresightedness today may help next time, even though the city is expected to rise from the present population of 7,000, to one of over 28,000,000; though perhaps by that time uncertainty will be about lighting not the streets but the upper airways.

The old era when farmers paid for their needs with acks of potatoes or beans, or whatever they grew, is duplicated now in the commerce of New York, only on in epic scale. Part of the payment for the services per formed here in shipping goods to all parts of the earth omes back in asparagus from Argentina, rhubarb from Canada, grapes from Belgium, dill pickles from Czecho dovakia, onions and new potatocs from Bermuda, bananas from Central America, and so on, through the whole very osmopolitan diet to which the city is accustomed. Week after week the New York office of the State Department Farms and Markets reports the arrival of vegetables and fruits from gardens or farms from five to five thousand or more miles away. Some of them are expensive such as the Argentine asparagus, which recently sold for $16 a bunch, though with a market as varied as the places from which the vegetables come, they seldom lack for

A monumental building to Thomas A. Edison, for which he, it would be hoped, would lay the corner stone and which would house all available mementos of the great achievements he has made in the advancement of American civilization, has been proposed by the chairman of the Electrical Board of Trade, Charles L. Eidlitz. The collection of mementos and data relating to Mr. Edison's work would form a museum open to the public. Mr. Eidlitz, who is one of the sixty-five Edison Pioneers, composed of men who worked with the inventor before 1889, thinks that a suitable building would cost about $5,000,-000. He proposes that it should be erected on Fifth Ave nue, to contain two floors for the museum and an auditorium, six or eight floors of offices, and four floors for club rooms and dormitories for the Electrical Board of Trade. The project could be financed, Mr. Eidlitz believes. by support from men in the electrical business.

The steadily increasing desire for college education, and the corresponding desire to put it within the reach announcement by the Borough President of Brooklyn shortly be asked to appropriate funds to establish an institution there similar to but not connected with City College of New York City. As the Borough of Brooklyn has a population of over 2,000,000, as well as a considerable population in the neighboring districts, it would probably draw a large number of students, especially among those who at present have residences close enough to one of the colleges to live at home, and yet far enough away to waste too much time in traveling.

4 4 4 Who owns New York City? Most of the inhabitants in the last hundred years since it began to spread beyond the early confines from the Battery to Canal Street, have slept peacefully at night supposing the whole transaction for the ownership to have been settled in 1626 when Peter Minuit bought Manhattan Island from the Indians for a few dollars' worth of merchandise. As it is proposed to celebrate the tercentennial of that event next May, however, there has been some review of the historical events. and it appears that there were then two islands, one reaching from the Battery to what is now Canal Street, but what was then Fresh Water Pond, which was connected by streams with the Hudson and East fivers, and the other, what is now the main body of Manhattan/Island. As the small piece would have been more than sufficient for his purpose, it is doubted that Peter Minuit bought the large one as well. The original archives may be in Holland, where, it is urged, a search should be made to safeguard the city's escutcheon.

The efflorescence of Spain is beginning to diffuse over America in the dresses being sent out from New York by buyers here in preparation for the spring shopping Reds, yellows, oranges and greens, in eighty-six varietles, vaguely reminiscent more of mantillas and olive-drab skies, perhaps, than of bobbed-hair bonnets and office desks, though none the less welcome in the general plumage, have found their way into the new color scheme from the recent spread of Spanish art. All is being prepared, too, to make this spring exceed the recent one the freshness of its burst of glory. "Father" has been assayed by the storekeepers at large and found to cor tain a higher percentage of retrievable gold. Buyers accordingly, whose business it is to pick in large lots two or three months in advance the styles and colors of dresses which the women of the country will decide to buy after spending hours and days in exhaustive searches are placing larger orders; and placing them with such an unanimity that there is little doubt that the women

"Moral Issues and National Boundaries"

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

Your editorial entitled "Moral Issues and National Boundaries," is, I am sure, entirely justified. I would venture to say that all right-thinking people disapprove the attitude of either a nation or an individual who is not whoie-heartedly in support of prohibition in the United or even anyone who is slack in any effort to com bat the terrible evil wrought through drink in any country

That Great Britain has gone a considerable way a co-operating with the United States, in its efforts to destroy liquor smuggling, does not in any way excuse her from not going the whole way, and, personally, I feel that he good men and women in authority there, who are in favor of this reform, will not rest until she doe Although I say the Monitor is justified in its com plaint, it struck me as being somewhat severe in its criticism of another country, when one looks around as nome and sees such wholesale defiance of law, not only amongst habitual drinkers (one might expect that) amongst so-called respectable citizens, comprising law yers, doctors, and merchants of various kinds.

It is my misfortune to have to make my home a hotel for the present, and the scene witnessed on New Year's Eve was one never to be forgotten; girls and boys of from seventeen to twenty-five years of age, and other people oider, in a helpless intoxicated state, and few sober onlookers with more than a lift of the eyebrows at the heartbreaking sight. When complaint was made, the reply was a challenge to find any hotel in this where a similar state of things did not exist. It is difficult for some people to realize such conditions prevailed even when every hotel held a liquor license. I the law were enforced over here, we know such things could not take place. I have lived many years in both countries, but never have such scenes taken place in an English hotel, if for no other reason than that a hotel pro prietor knows the utter impossibility of his renewing his icense, aid he allow such carousing to take place on his premises. Even more than this, however, excessive drinking amongst (so-called) respectable England has long ago been entirely out of fashion at parties to which members of both sexes are invited.

Surely soon those who are parents, at least, will see how serious an offense it is, and how dangerous an example they are setting, when they treat with contempt or even indifference, any part of the Constitution of the which has given them true liberty, viz., the United States of America.

"On Regulating Pedestrians"

To the Euitor of The Christian Science Monitor Having just read a letter signed "R. B.," and run inder the heading "On Regulating Pedestrians," I would like to point out, further, that a great many accidents to pedestrians could be avoided if they would always look first to the left before stepping off a curb.

If you will give the matter a moment's thought you will readily see that no matter when or where a person steps off a curb the traffic that they should give their first attention is approaching from their left. An educa-tional campaign directed to the attainment of this aim would, I believe, greatly reduce the number of accidents. Sawtelle, Calif. F. H.
